

Morningside Campus Media

The student voice of Morningside College

Have a passion for news? Dying to test your talents as a disc jockey? Want to work in broadcast production or direction? Getting engaged with Morningside College's campus media may be just the answer. With an online newspaper, campus radio station, and television studio production unit right here on campus, opportunities abound for students of all disciplines and majors to have a voice on campus.

Collegian Reporter (CR)

Morningside has supported a campus newspaper since 1897, just three years after the college was established. Written, edited, and produced by students, the Collegian Reporter is an online newspaper devoted to news, sports, entertainment, and opinion. Whether you enjoy writing, editing, photography, or graphic design, the Collegian Reporter offers plenty of creative opportunities. Advertising and underwriting positions are available for those more interested in the business side of things. To see what it's all about, check out <http://wordpress.morningside.edu/the-cr/>.

By writing for the Collegian Reporter I have met a lot of new people. It really helped me meet people my freshman year. It's nice to talk to new people, learn about different topics, and see others' points of view when I'm preparing articles for the paper.

KMSC Fusion 93

KMSC is Morningside's student-run, FCC-licensed station, broadcasting on the FM dial at 92.9 from studios in the Hickman-Johnson-Furrow Learning Center. The station offers the campus community and Siouxland residents an eclectic mix of music and specialty programming, including broadcasts of Morningside College football and basketball games. Advanced student sportscasters have opportunities to work with professional announcers covering Morningside and area high school games on a local commercial radio station. KMSC programming is also available via the Internet at <http://kmsc.morningside.edu/>.

"You can be in any Mass Comm program without being a Mass Comm major or minor."

Jennifer Williams, Spanish and Mass Communications major

MCTV

As a student-run video and television production unit, MCTV offers opportunities in pre-production, production, and post-production of student video projects. MCTV also has a direct feed to broadcast programming on Sioux City CableOne channel 12.

Tidbits and Trivia:

- Prior to the mid-1990s, KMSC Fusion 93 was called "The Big Dog" and played Top 40 hits.
- Nationally syndicated advice columnists Ann Landers and Abigail Van Buren got a jumpstart on their careers by writing regular gossip columns in the Morningside campus newspaper.
- The Collegian Reporter was once titled L'Echo.
- Several of the positions within the three campus media outlets have work study compensation available.

Communicating. Entertaining. Exchanging ideas.
That's what Campus Media is all about.
